AFTER COUNTLESS MAN-YEARS SPENT TO TRACE PROPERTY OF GERMAN JEWS SEIZED AS ALIEN ASSETS BY U.S. IN WAR, RESTITUTION GETS $500,000 FOR NAZI VICTIMS

Ten years ago, an unusual investigation was launched in the U.S. Its quest: trace and recover the property of deceased and heirless German Jews whose investments in the U.S. had been seized as alien assets in World War II, writes Marshall Peck, in the New York Herald Tribune. Its purpose: to put the money to benevolent use on behalf of those who had suffered under Nazism.

It was, as one Washington lawyer put it, "an unbelievably monumental job. An almost impossible task."

For five years, a Washington law firm retained by the New [illegible] Jewish Restitution Successor Organization, worked in the U.S. and abroad seeking evidence that deceased individuals had deposits, or stocks, or other property in the U.S., that had been seized by the government.

"We spent countless man-years on this job," said Julian Singman, of Lambie, Cohen, and Singman, the law firm. "We traced several thousand names. We have cabinets full of data. We went through old pre-war German Government records, through bank records, stock purchases.

"We followed their lives to the end of the line." Often, he said, that was death in a gas chamber.

But after all this painstaking work, the law firm concluded it was futile to try to track down these lost and heirless persons one by one. The lawyers recommended to JRSO that it seek a lump sum payment from the government.

At that time, Mr. Singman said, it was his law firm's estimate that the heirless Jewish property taken over by the government amounted to $3 million.

After almost five further years of attempts to obtain legislation [illegible] says the New York Herald Tribune, the [illegible] community had its compromise [illegible] $500,000.

Why the difference between what [illegible] through Congress was whatever the [illegible], the payment is an extraordinary gesture.

It is the first award under the General War Claims Bill enacted last October 22. It is, as Dr. Edward D. Re, chairman of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, puts it, "our attempt to make some gesture for victims of Nazi oppression who are now in the United States."

It only got into law at all because, after a new war damages bill had passed the House without a mention of the Jewish claims, an amendment was offered in the Senate by Republican Sen. Kenneth Keating of New York.

"The question of the heirless Jewish claims was something the Senator had been interested in and working on for years," a Keating aide said. "His amendment was backed by several other Senators, Sen. Philip A. Hart, D., Mich., being one of the principal supporters." Senators Jacob K. Javits, and Hugh Scott, R., Ariz., also helped Mr. Keating's amendment, and it was subsequently agreed to by the House. Thus the statute relating to heirless Jewish claims became a part of the new war damage bill.

JRSO, founded in 1955, had been the key organization in dealing with West German states who made restitution for property of heirless Jews confiscated in their boundaries.

Although, according to one JRSO spokesman, these matters have still not been entirely wound up, says the New York Herald Tribune, the organization a decade ago fastened its attention on the situation that had existed in the United States.

Obviously, thousands of German Jews had held property there of one kind or another. Rightful heirs were reimbursed when located. But there remained that unknown quantity, how many other German Jews had died, without family and with records lost, after having investments taken over as alien assets?

The JRSO engaged the Washington law firm. It was paid an undisclosed fee for its years of work, but the law firm says, nothing near the normal recompense for all the widening here and abroad that it invested in its search.

[illegible] the Jewish community [illegible] the highest duty of [illegible] that it be [illegible] are justly expended.

Monroe Goldwater, New York attorney, is president of JRSO and has the funds in hand. It is up to him to meet with other Jewish groups which make up JRSO's board of directors, and to initiate a program aimed at helping persons who have come to the U.S. as refugees after suffering under the Nazi scourge — for that is the specific intent of the U.S. payment.

Mr. Goldwater, chairman of the Law Committee of the Democratic State Committee, and president for 15 years of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York, said he intends to call a meeting on allocation of the fund shortly, says the New York Herald Tribune. Payments are expected to go out during the latter part of this year.

Mr. Goldwater is exuberant over the amount received from the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission office. He admits "we made a claim for much more. But it meant we would have to establish the death of all those people, individual by individual. We decided to agree on a just and reasonable sum."

JRSO has handled large amounts in the past, and Mr. Goldwater mentioned a number of achievements for the Jewish community made possible by former claims payments.

He said he also had thoughts on how the present award may be used. He said that particular attention will be given to helping the Jewish aged and for Jewish religious purposes. Also, according to Mr. Singer, $50,000 of this amount is earmarked for Protestant and Catholic relief organizations, according to the law.

Mr. Goldwater stressed that payments will not be made on an additional basis, but will be made to organizations. JRSO, which has its office at 3 East 54th Street, New York, will report on the manner of its division to the Foreign Claims Commission.

Mr. Goldwater said the organizations which would be represented at the meeting on use of the money included the: American Jewish Congress, World Jewish Congress, American Jewish Committee, Council of Jews from Germany, the Jewish Agency, and the American Joint Distribution Committee.

Putting the money to work will be as trying as was the long quest that obtained it, the JRSO officials believe. "We will have to be very, very careful," said Ernest Weissman, a veteran JRSO staff member. In effect, he was saying:

"We have worked so hard for this; we cannot fail those unknown who earned it, or those now who placed it in our hands, or those throughout the community who will use it good."

Aramco Complies With Order On Jewish Job-Seekers

The Arabian-American Oil Company (Aramco) is complying with an order by the New York State Commission for Human Rights to stop discriminating against Jewish job applicants, it was reported by the American Jewish Congress. Shad Polier, chairman of the Governing Council of the Jewish group, disclosed the findings of a study by a State Commission field examiner into the company's hiring practices. He said the Congress would recommend acceptance of the field examiner's conclusion that Aramco is complying in good faith with the Commission's order.

Mr. Polier said the compliance check had revealed these developments:

1. Applicants for jobs not requiring travel to Saudi Arabia are now hired without regard to religion. Aramco uses a number of employment agencies to recruit personnel, including the New York State Employment Service, which has a firm non-discrimination policy. Aramco also places "blind" ads for secretarial help; persons replying to the ads are invited to fill out application forms.

2. Aramco has offered jobs to three Jewish applicants. One did not appear for work. The second remained only two days. The third person has been employed by Aramco for several months and told the field examiner that she was Jewish and that she was being "marvelously" treated by the company.

3. Applicants for jobs requiring travel to Saudi Arabia are no longer asked whether they are Jews. If the applicant is approved, [illegible] He is then told to obtain a visa from the local Saudi Arabian consulate. No applicant has been refused a visa under this system, although there is no indication that any of the applicants have been Jewish.

4. Aramco has informed the State Commission that Saudi Arabia no longer requires that visa applicants be "sponsored." While the case was pending, Aramco took the position that the King of Saudi Arabia required every visa applicant to have a "sponsor," and that Aramco was required to vouch for the fact that the visa applicant was eligible for admission to Saudi Arabia, that is, that the person was not Jewish.

Mr. Polier served as attorney for the American Jewish Congress in its six-year, legal campaign against Aramco's employment practices. The Congress had charged Aramco with violating the New York fair employment law

Israel Plans To Import Desert Wildlife, Known To Hebrew Prophets, To Negev Reserve

Desert wildlife that was known to Moses and later Hebrew prophets, but is now in danger of extinction, is to be preserved for posterity at a reservation to be established in the Negev. This arid region was the natural habitat in biblical times for various species of antelope, including the Arabian oryx, wild asses, gazelles, and ostriches. All except the gazelles are now extinct in the area, says the London Times, and it is planned to bring breeding animals from abroad.

The Ministry of the Interior has announced that 3,750 acres north of Eilat are to be allocated for the reservation. It is to be fenced off to prevent the animals from straying and to protect them from poachers and the wolves that roam that part of the Negev; otherwise the animals will live and breed in freedom. About 20 animals are to be brought for a start, but it is estimated that the reservation will be able to accommodate 300.

It will be part of the projected Negev National Park and is envisaged as a centre for zoological study, research, and recreation. Its location, just off the Yotvata Eilat highway, will be on a route popular with tourists and facilities are to be provided for camping and recreation.

Professor Heinrich Mendelssohn, head of the department of zoology at Tel Aviv University, who is scientific adviser for the project, said it had originally been intended as a reserve for African wildlife. Nature-lovers in Israel had feared that the emerging African states would neglect the preservation of [illegible] ernments are doing more preservation better than the Government of Israel", Professor Mendelssohn said. "They don't need our help."

Moreover, experts advised the Government that the Negev was not naturally suitable for zebras, giraffes, and other animals from the African savannah regions and that large sums would be required to bring additional food and water to the reservation for those species. Accordingly, thoughts changed to a reservation for wildlife from the desert belt stretching from Morocco to Turkestan and western India. Professor Mendelssohn said that wildlife was being rapidly destroyed in those areas since western oil explorers and others had taken to hunting with machine-guns from aircraft and cars.

One of the species that will be hardest to acquire is the Arabian oryx. Professor Mendelssohn said the animal was the Biblical reem (translated in the Authorized Version as "unicorn"), which was common in Sinai and the Negev during the period of the exodus from Egypt, says the London Times. Moses, in his final blessing to the tribe of Joseph, said: "His horns are like the horns of unicorns". (Deut. xxxiii, 17.)

The long-horned, white animals with dark brown markings on their heads, legs and tails have been extinct in the Negev for 150 years. There were between 5,000 and 10,000 of them in Saudi Arabia a decade ago but they have been virtually wiped out. There are still some in southern Arabia and in European zoos, from whom Professor Mendelssohn hopes to acquire some for breeding in the reservation. He also plans to acquire some Sahara oryx, which are bigger and whose horns are somewhat curved. A few thousand have survived in the western Sahara where there is no human settlement, but they are being killed off by French oil explorers.

Also to be brought from the Sahara is the addax antelope, which some scholars identify with one of the animals listed in Deuteronomy xiv, 5, among the clean animals whose flesh the Hebrews may eat. They have corkscrew horns and broad hoofs for travelling in sand, and are capable of going long periods without water.

Wild asses were mentioned by Job, who asked (xxxix, 5): "Who sent out the wild ass free? or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass?" The Asian wild ass as known to Job is extinct; the last of them are believed to have been killed in northern Iraq by the third [illegible]. However, the species in Iraq [illegible] hoped to acquire a few pairs. Other species have survived in Afghanistan, India, Turkestan, Tibet, and Mongolia.

Isaiah, in prophesying the doom of Babylon, (xiii, 21) said: "Owls shall dwell there." Later translations give ostriches instead of owls, but the Arabian ostriches that Isaiah knew are extinct. The last ones were killed in Trans-Jordan 30 years ago. The Sudanese species, which is bigger but has the same type of red neck and legs, would serve the purpose of the Negev reservation.

Professor Mendelssohn said that the gazelles' speed and small size had saved them from extermination in Israel. The hill gazelles, which are scattered all over the country, are still numerous, but the dorcas species in the Negev has been dwindling, says the London Times. Israel Army officers have been hunting them illegally and have killed about 1,000 since 1958, he said.

J.D.C. Feeding Project Has Aid Of British Jews

A new project developed by the Medical Department of the Joint Distribution Committee for undernourished Jewish children in Morocco has been adopted by the Projects Committee of the British Freedom From Hunger Campaign, it was announced by Charles H. Jordan, JDC Director-General. Up to $36,400 has been pledged toward the project by the Central British Fund for Jewish Relief and Rehabilitation and by the British OSE (Jewish Children's health agency).

The program's long-term goal is to provide sound nutrition for infants and young children up to the age of three years, maintaining feeding programs on behalf of some 24,500 children over three years of age in a country-wide network of day care centres, schools, and supplementary feeding centres. The primary American agency serving needy Jews overseas, it receives its main financial support from the United Jewish Appeal. At present, milk stations supply reconstituted milk and formulas for children, but only up to the age of about nine months. By the time they reach kindergarten age they begin to show signs of malnutrition once more.

A study of Jewish children in Morocco by nutrition specialists found that at birth and for six months afterward the youngsters weigh as much as children in more advanced countries. By the time they are two, however, they weigh about six pounds less than European or North American children. JDC will provide most of the food for the program. In addition, the training of the mothers in feeding practices, the preparation and storage of food, appropriate infant foods and weaning procedures, will play an important part in the project. Emphasis will be placed on locally-available foodstuffs which will fit into the family food habits and budget.

The training program, designed expressly for expectant and nursing mothers, will include simple nutrition and infant feeding. This will be accompanied by home visits to assist mothers in applying the instructions at home and to follow up on the development of the child. A feeding demonstration centre for the project is being set up, and personnel assigned to the program are now in training.

The Maternal and Child Centre of OSE-Casablanca has been invited to assume a key role in the new project. This Centre now serves a yearly average of 3,000 children, almost every Jewish infant born in Casablanca.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white taffeta, fashioned with a fitted bodice; lace jacket; and bouffant skirt, made with an apron effect of matching Chantilly lace; and continuing as a long train. Her veil of tulle illusion was topped by a crown of seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and stephanotis. Miss Gloria Pinsky was her sister's maid of honour. She wore a pink, sleeveless, peau de soie gown, made with a beaded, lace bodice; jewel neckline; and A-line skirt; also a matching bow in her hair; and her bouquet was of deep pink roses. Misses Elaine Rockman, and Helaine Oppenheimer, were bridesmaids. Each wore a pink, sleeveless, chiffon and lace gown, which had a bouffant skirt; also a petal-shaped head-piece; and carried light pink roses. Michael Gold was his brother's best man. Jeffrey Pinsky, brother of the bride, was a junior attendant. The ushers were: Harold Pinsky, brother of the bride; Hyman Ruckenstein, Ruby Debrofsky, and Gary Pekofsky, all cousins of the bride; Eric Gold, cousin of the groom; William Pothitos, Michael Abelson, Joel Rosenthal, Charles Salaten, Neil Freedman, Paul Michelin, and Edward Wiltzer. White, and pink roses, carnations, and chrysanthemums, arranged with greenery, formed the setting of the wedding. There was orchestra music. Three hundred and twenty-five guests were received in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Pinsky, mother of the bride, wore a pink, peau de soie sheath. It had a scooped neckline; with a back panel extending from the waistline. Her hat was a matching pill-box. Mrs. Gold, mother of the groom, wore a pink, sleeveless, peau de soie gown, cut with a cowl neckline; and a matching pill-box hat. Their flowers were corsages of white, and pink orchids. Who Pays Those Big Prices For Clothes? Almost Any Woman With Money

A beaded ball gown that cost $2,250 arrived at Neiman Marcus in Dallas, Texas. It was sold right out of the box. The previous day a store in Philadelphia received a big name designer costume consisting of a flared tweed skirt, a stole and a silk blouse priced at $600. Three days later that costume and an $800 cotton lace ball gown were sold to a customer, says the New York Times. In New York, a $935 Galanos daytime ensemble, a $895 Talmack evening gown, and a Jean Louis chiffon ball gown for $1,500 were among the first season's fashions to be sold.

Who are the women who spend such sums on clothes and how can such price tags be justified?

The customer for the highpriced clothes, according to the stores that sell to her, may live anywhere in America. She may be in the Social Register or she may come from the vast ranks of "new money." She may be the wife of a business executive or a professional man.

She may be famous or her name may be unknown outside her circle of friends. She may be a woman of quiet good taste who looks for the same quality in clothes as in a new car or her child's school. She may be the woman who indulges in all the new fashions each season.

She may be a woman who used to buy custom-order clothes and, perhaps, still does have some things made to order in Paris or New York. She may buy a big name design as a status symbol or as an investment. She may be the woman who walks into a store looking like two cents.

"They are first and foremost people with money," said an Ohio store owner. "In the last five years every one seems to have so much more money. People treat $800 the way they used to treat $300. In their minds, it's just like the price of milk going up a few cents a quart."

Another trait these customers share, according to store owners and buyers across the country, is a genuine interest in fashion, says the New York Times. As a rule, they have good, easy-to-fit figures, although they are generally more than thirty years of age.

by discriminating against Jewish job seekers.

Last year (on September 28, 1962) the State Commission for Human Rights ruled that Aramco had illegally questioned job applicants on their religion and had refused to hire Jews for work in its New York office or Saudi Arabia, where it conducts its oil extracting, refining, and shipping operations. Aramco was ordered to cease and desist from its discriminatory practices and to take specific affirmative steps to wipe out the effects of past discrimination.

On December 14, 1962, Aramco entered into a stipulation with the American Jewish Congress and the State Commission under which the oil company waived any right to contest the Commission's ruling or to challenge the Commission's order. Under the Commission's procedures, a field examiner was assigned to check Aramco's compliance with the order last month, six months after the stipulation was signed.

Commenting on the findings of the Commission, Mr. Polier declared:

"Presumably Jews are still barred from entering Saudi Arabia, although recent developments regarding the assignment of American military personnel to that country may foreshadow changes in Saudi Arabia's long-standing policy. In any case, what American Jewish Congress sought, and what has now resulted, is that Aramco should not participate in the visa-issuing process, by screening out Jews before they present themselves for visas to Saudi Arabia. We are deeply gratified that Aramco is now hiring on the basis of merit only and that it has welcomed and will continue to welcome Jewish job applicants on an equal basis with all others."

Memories Of A Polish "Shtetl"

BY GOLDA FISCHER

In the Polish shtetl (town) of Rohatyn where I grew up, all intellectual life centred around the gymnasium. This stood majestically in the centre of our little town, next to the only other important structure, the town church. To us Jews, who comprised a majority of the population of 10,000, the fence around the church furnished a back drop for a convenient meeting place. Here our most promising Jewish youths gathered to discuss their problems, plan their future, or just to whistle at the girls passing by.

If you stood there long enough, you could see almost everyone in town. It was an easy way to make dates, exchange books, plan meetings, or just talk about the hopeless future. For even before the war and the ghastly slaughter to come, the future looked hopeless to most of the young people leaning against that fence.

A very few of us were fortunate to have the opportunity to study abroad. It was not easy to be accepted at foreign universities, and it was costly beyond the reach of most of our people.

To be accepted at a Polish university was almost out of the question. All schools of higher learning had a numerus clausus for medicine and its related fields. A few Jews were permitted to study law, but to the majority only the field of philosophy was open, with the dubious outlook of what one could do later.

How many Jewish college teachers would Poland choose to employ? It was particularly hard for the boys. A girl could get married and raise a family — but a man? Of what avail were scholastic attainments or fine personality or good looks? Unless he had good connections or money to go abroad, his fate was sealed.

Nor was there much to hope for in following our fathers' footsteps. Most of the shopkeepers or artisans could hardly eke out a living. The few professionals could not accept their sons as associates, and only a limited number of well-to-do merchants could absorb their sons into business. It was obvious that there was no need for any more merchants or artisans, and Jews were just not given the opportunity to be anything else.

Nor was there much chance to emigrate. Palestine was closed by the British, and America was accessible only to those few who had relatives willing to serve as guarantors. Even for these there were many years of anxious waiting because the Polish quota was small.

Consequently, our boys, as they approached manhood, had only two alternatives: to keep their ideals and sacrifice their future, trying to do the best they could under the circumstances, or to "sell" themselves in order to attain a profession.

To sell yourself meant to become engaged to a girl whose parents had managed to scrape enough money together for a dowry. That dowry would either buy the young man a business or, preferably, send him to a university abroad. It was a hard test of character for the young men, many of whom must have been tempted to desert their betrothed at the end of their studies for girls of their own choosing. But for the most part they fulfilled their obligation with honour. Fortunate indeed were the few boys whose parents could send them abroad without commitments.

My father thought as much of his daughter as of his son, and I was given a chance to go to Vienna to study medicine instead of being "sold" to a potential doctor. Although Polish Jews were barred from studying medicine in Poland, they were allowed to study abroad. Then, if they could pass a rigid licensing examination, they were permitted to practise in Poland.

This regulation, understandably, closed the medical profession to all but the exceptionally brilliant. Most of my girl friends who finished matura (graduation) had no such choice. Either their parents had no means, or they married them off.

Our Zionist organization was the only hope for a better future, and gave some substance and meaning to our existence. We were quite young when we were drawn into the Zionist movement. For all of us, Israel was a reason to exist, something to work for. Zionist meetings were our scout clubs and country clubs, social dances, and summer camps. Little did we know that Israel would really take shape in our lifetime.

We must have matured early for our discussions were on a lofty plane. We covered Jewish and Zionist history and world politics. Between the ages of fourteen and sixteen my brother and I, with other friends, organized Zionist chapters of Hanoar Haivri. We had our fun, too, community singing and dancing and taking long hikes. We were in it together — to some day build a better world. Only it did not happen that way! Very few saw much of their dream come true. The majority were thrown into the fires of human cruelty and sadism.

Gone are the many synagogues and the people who tried to walk humbly with their God. A great culture has been buried in Rohatyn, as in all the other shtetlach and cities. Gone also are the mysticism and romanticism of the Hasidic group which we loved so dearly. Few Jewish children today know the joy and exaltation of dancing with Hasidim and their Torahs on Simchat Torah. Never have I seen jollier people at a dance anywhere.

I still see their faces burning with desire for a better world, frantic at times, and hopeful at others. How heartwarming were their tunes and melodies, expressing all they could not or did not dare to express in other ways. There were fine scholars among them: others were good teachers, still others had rare talents for all sorts of secular learning.

How much richer were we students of the gymnasium, who kept our roots in the culture of our forefathers, filling our hearts and minds with our people's heritage. How hard it must have been for the assimilated, who preferred the ranks of the Polish intelligentsia, to accept their final fate. What a pity that the few Jewish professors were so insecure that they never dared to join us. Some were as bad as our non-Jewish professors, exacting bribes from Jewish parents to enable their children to enter the gymnasium or pass examinations.

An Englishman once said that every country has the kind of Jews it deserves. Poland did not deserve the Jews it had, considering the treatment it gave them. By all the laws of human nature, there should have been many thieves and cheats among Poland's Jews, for stealing from the government was a mitzvah and cheating at examinations was almost a must.

A Jew had to be exceedingly bright to pass without cheating or bribery. Many a professor thought nothing of acquiring merchandise at a store belonging to the parents of a pupil and never paying for it. If a bill was sent, the pupil was sure to flunk.

I remember how my father went to the house of the mathematics teacher to demand money or the return of his merchandise. He could be bold because my brother was an excellent mathematics student who could not fail. Many years have passed — yet I still resent bitterly the bleeding of Jewish parents for good marks given their children.

There are happier memories as well. Our Jewish orchestra, the Faust brothers, played at waturas, at weddings, on every occasion when there was a zloty to be earned. One of the brothers, our violin teacher, often told us about the adventures of his past. He had been in the great land of America and had had a chance to marry a rich girl, but preferred to come home and marry the girl he loved. I often wondered how wise he had been. Could he have foreseen his end?

On Yom Kippur, when all of us would run home from synagogue after the fast to rejoice with our families over some delicacies, the Fausts would go from house to house, playing happy tunes to wish those who could afford this luxury a happy New Year.

Though not without their human faults, our people were a benevolent group. They helped each other in times of hardship and need; no one ever really starved or went bankrupt. There was much money-lending. No beggar was ever turned away or went hungry on the Sabbath or on a Holy Day.

Seldom did we have a Friday evening without a stranger to share our meals; it was my task as a little girl to watch at the window to see whether father was bringing someone home. On Saturdays I used to count the number of men he brought home for Kiddush, and our mother was always prepared.

Today all the synagogues are destroyed and the Jewish homes taken over by people who hated us, people who took part in capturing, torturing, and finally killing the frightened children, their horrified mothers, the weak, and the old. How can we, the survivors, find consolation? Can we hope that out of this monstrous holocaust there will emerge such a revulsion against man's inhumanity that future generations may never know the scourge of unreasoned hate and savage brutality?

MORE ABOUT ESHKOL

Levi Eshkol (Shkolnik), third Prime Minister of Israel, was born at Uratov in the Kiev district of the Ukraina on October 25, 1895. He received a traditional Jewish education and later, at Oman and Odessa, he began preparing for entry into the Russian Gymnasium. Owing, however, to "numerous clauses" restrictions then in force in Russia, he went to Vilna where he received his secular education.

Vilna was a Zionist centre at the time and it was there that Eshkol joined the Zeire Zion group, in whose ranks he worked for about three years. At Vilna he met Joseph Sprinzak and under his influence he decided to go to Palestine. Arriving in the country at the beginning of 1914, he made his way to Petach Tikva where he worked as an agricultural labourer. His first job was on the construction of the pumping station to bring water from the Yarkon for the irrigation of the orange groves at Petach Tikva and Ein Ganim.

He was elected to the Labour Council at Petach Tikva and his first "economic" post was that of administrator of the workers' kitchen in that settlement. He was later among the founders of the Avodah group which undertook various agricultural contracting jobs, and as a member of that group he worked at Atarot and on the lands of Kiryat Anavim. During that period he joined the ranks of the Hapoel Hatzair.

In 1918 he volunteered to the Jewish Legion and there, for the first time, met David Ben-Gurion. He served in the 40th Battalion of the Royal Fusiliers, together with Eliahu Golomb, Dov Hos, Yitzhak Ben-Zvi, and others. The Hapoel Hatzair party, however, asked for his early release in order that he might be able to administrate the Agricultural Department of the party. Soon after his release in 1920 he began looking around for a place of settlement for himself and his group, and so Degania B was founded.

Levi Eshkol participated in the Founding Conference of the General Federation of Jewish Labour, the Histadruth, which took place in 1921. He has been a delegate to all Zionist Congresses beginning with the 12th Congress.

In the 1920's, following a bout of malaria from which he had suffered since his arrival in Israel, Eshkol undertook a mission to Lithuania on behalf of the Histadruth. He also undertook missions on behalf of the labour movement to Vienna and Berlin. In 1927 he went to Moscow as member of a delegation to the Conference on Cooperation. He was also a delegate to the International Socialist Conference in Prague.

Towards the end of the 1920's he was a member of the "Agricultural Centre" and, following the formation of the Palestine Jewish Labour Party (Mapai), he was entrusted to be secretary of the Tel Aviv Labour Council. Eshkol was then elected to the Mapai Centre and subsequently served as secretary of the party and member of its executive, together with David Ben-Gurion, Mordecai Namir, and Aryeh Bahir.

During the early period of the Nazi regime, he directed the Agricultural Settlement Department in the Palestine Office in Berlin for three years and undertook missions on behalf of Hechaluts to Germany, Poland, and Lithuania. He organized the transfer of immigrants and their property from Germany and through the money thus raised, he was instrumental in the establishment of the Mekorot Water Company, the Shikun and Amidar Housing Companies etc.

Levi Eshkol devoted much of his activities to the security problems of the Yishuv and during various periods served on the High Command of the Hagana. For many years he was also treasurer of that Jewish defence organization. He engaged in acquiring arms in countries abroad under underground conditions. In 1947 he was called upon by Ben-Gurion to occupy a central position on the Hagana High Command, and on the establishment of the State of Israel he was appointed director general of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Eshkol has also been a member of the Executive of the Jewish Agency and, as head of its Agricultural Settlement Department since 1949, was responsible for the mass settlement of the new immigrants. From 1950 to 1952 he was treasurer of the Jewish Agency. In 1951 he was appointed Minister of Agriculture and Development, and a year later he assumed the post of Minister of Finance. He has also been Chairman of the Ministerial Committee on Economic Affairs and Acting Prime Minister on various occasions. It was he who formed the Government that assumed power in November, 1961.

As Minister of Finance, Mr. Eshkol represented Israel at various international conferences of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund as well as during the negotiations with Eric Johnson in regard to the Water Development Plans. Mr. Eshkol has played a central role in the raising of monetary resources in the United States through the Bond Drive and the United Jewish Appeal.

He has four daughters, and a grandchild. His late wife, Elisheva Eshkol, was a woman labour leader in Israel and abroad. Mr. Eshkol has a command of English, Russian, and German.

JEWISH AGENCY U. S. HEAD TELLS SENATE GROUP ABOUT ITS RESCUE OF JEWS

Urgent tasks to rescue Jews in many parts of the world impose a continuing responsibility on the Jewish Agency for Israel, Isadore Hamlin, of New York, the executive director of the organization's American Section, told the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. Hamlin was accompanied by the Jewish Agency's attorney, Maurice M. Boukstein, of New York.

"Recent developments in Africa, Asia, and other parts of the world and restrictions by many countries forecast a continuation of mass migration into Israel," Mr. Hamlin declared. He cited the major role that the United States had played in facilitating the birth of Israel. He said that the Jewish Agency-American Section was the representative in the United States of the Jewish Agency for Israel, the executive arm of the World Zionist Organization, whose headquarters are in Jerusalem, and is duly registered under the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938.

The Agency official described the two-fold program of the Zionist movement, "to restore the people of the Bible to the land of the Bible and to preserve and extend the Jewish cultural heritage," saying that the practical necessity of rescuing Jews from physical oppression, cultural, social, and economic discrimination in many lands makes imperative the accelerated pace of the Agency's activities.

In its rescue, resettlement, and rehabilitation of 1,200,000 refugees since World War II, the Jewish Agency has spent $1,500,000,000, of which approximately 40% represents charitable contributions by Americans through the United Jewish Appeal.

The skills and experience acquired by the new immigrants in Palestine, largely through the guidance of the Jewish Agency, had made it possible to establish a stable and democratic government when Israel was created in 1948. Though the creation of the State of Israel brought an end to the Agency's political role, the responsibilities for immigration, resettlement, and rehabilitation continued to this day. Mr. Hamlin declared, detailing the activities of his agency in meeting its obligations.

Mr. Hamlin described the rescue of the pitiful remnants of Hitler's extermination whose arrival had been followed by whole communities destitute from European, Middle East, Asian, and African lands. These refugees were now free, productive citizens, permanently settled in Israel and attesting to the effectiveness of the Jewish Agency in fulfilling its tasks.

Mr. Hamlin outlined the work of the Jewish Agency-American Section in the United States in extending help to preserve and develop the Jewish cultural heritage and in providing information about Israel, its people, problems, and progress, in order to facilitate fund-raising in the United States.

The American Section encourages the study of Hebrew in high schools and colleges in the United States, cooperates with Jewish education bureaus and sponsors seminars and conferences on Jewish education. It maintains an institute for adult education and arranges seminars in Israel for students, teachers, and others engaged in the educational field.

The Jewish Agency official noted that: "The Jews of the [illegible] settlements of the Jewish Agency."

Mr. Hamlin's appearance was in connection with an inquiry that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee began some time ago into the administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938. The Agency, among others, was invited to provide the Committee with certain information pertinent to its activities and extended full cooperation to the Committee, supplying it with all necessary information.

...proof of Quebec's good taste

An award of honour—the only such distinction won by a Quebec brewery—certifies the choice of a growing number of Dow Ale drinkers. The international jury of World Beer and Ale Olympics presented Dow Brewery Limited with this award at its 1963 session in Cologne, Germany.

Dow the crowning achievement in ale
